Entrepreneur magazine awards

Entrepreneurs looking for grant money to help with any kind of for-profit venture will find that they are few and far between. Subsidies for magazine publishing ventures are no exception. However, the subject of the magazine you publish may be a bridge to a greater chance of support from interested organizations. Idea Cafe is an online organization formed in 1995 by experienced entrepreneurs to provide others with the information and resources needed for success themselves. Idea Cafe, starting in mid-2010, offered 10 competitive small business scholarships of $1,000 each to small businesses. These scholarships were awarded based on criteria such as: innovation and originality, entrepreneurial spirit and creative spirit. The National Endowment for the Arts is a U.S. government program that issues grants and funding for a variety of projects each year to support the literary and performing arts. According to its website, one of the ways the Arts Endowment strives to support and promote the American literary tradition is to ensure that literary and magazine presses, community organizations and national literary centers complement the commercial publishing sector in the formation of contemporary American letters. So if you want to publish a literary magazine, you should consider this avenue. The NHPRC grant program was created by the U.S. Congress in 1934. Each year, the program funds up to $10 million in grants to worthy beneficiaries. The NHPRC website specifies that some of these grants are provided for projects editing and publishing historical records of national importance. For example, one of the NHPRC's main stated goals for these grants is to make it accessible to citizens, American documents of historical significance, such as those documenting the nation's formative period, as well as a variety of other topics. For Canadians, there is the Canada Periodic Fund, which provides a wide range of funding and support for print as well as online magazines. One example is its program to help business innovation. This program provides financial and other support to small and medium-sized magazines to actively encourage industry innovations and content diversity in the Canadian market.
